Return to Work Employer Support and Resources

Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, CareFirst BlueCross BlueShield has remained committed to the health and safety of our accounts, members and communities. As a private health insurer serving public and private funded populations, we recognize our responsibility as a source of trusted information and an ally in mitigating the risk and challenges posed by this public health crisis.

During today's broker webinar, we reviewed the resources, solutions and communications CareFirst has collected and produced to help our clients plan for and support their employees' return to work. If you were not able to attend the webinar, you can view the August 20 webcast presentation here.

Accounts can immediately take advantage of the core (free) resources available on our Return to Work page. These tools range from the Johns Hopkins Center for Health Security's Business online toolkit to determine and moderate the risk of COVID-19, to live webinars and communications materials to help ease employees' concerns. The Toolkit's Risk Assessment is a good way to get started in sizing up your clients' specific company risk and what mitigation measures would be necessary to contain it.

For self-insured employers desiring additional solutions to safeguard their employees, we have curated a selection of à la carte resources, or practical mitigation measure solutions, to address their unique needs. Solutions include on-site testing and screenings, COVID return to work consultation services and custom care packages. Details and pricing for each of these options is included in our Return with Care flier. Accounts with available wellness credits can allocate them toward the purchase of any offering.
